Responsible Fish Trade and Food Security John Kurien, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, 2005-01-01 This report focuses primarily on the direct and indirect influences of fish trade and food security It reviews in detail the positive and negative impacts of international fish trade on food security in low income food deficit countries The main findings are that this trade has had a positive effect on food security both through higher availability of fish for human consumption in developing countries and through higher income generated through trade The report cautions however that sustainable resource management practices are a necessary condition for sustainable international trade It also highlights the need for free and transparent trade and market policies to ensure that benefits from international trade are enjoyed by all segments of society

Freedom from Want George Kent, 2005 There is literally a world of difference between the statements Everyone should have adequate food and Everyone has the right to adequate food In George Kent s view the lofty rhetoric of the first statement will not be fulfilled until we take the second statement seriously Kent sees hunger as a deeply political problem Too many people do not have adequate control over local resources and cannot create the circumstances that would allow them to do meaningful productive work and provide for themselves The human right to an adequate livelihood including the human right to adequate food needs to be implemented worldwide in a systematic way Freedom from Want makes it clear that feeding people will not solve the problem of hunger for feeding programs can only be a short term treatment of a symptom not a cure The real solution lies in empowering the poor Governments in particular must ensure that their people face enabling conditions that allow citizens to provide for themselves In a wider sense Kent brings an understanding of human rights as a universal system applicable to all nations on a global scale If as Kent argues everyone has a human right to adequate food it follows that those who can empower the poor have a duty to see that right implemented and the obligation to be held morally and legally accountable for seeing that that right is realized for everyone everywhere
